

Collaborative Change

Creating High Performance Partnerships & Alliances

Andrew Humphries
and
Richard Gibbs

In their second book Gibbs and Humphries look at how the need for constant organisational improvements and the increase in partnering come together in what they describe as Collaborative Change.

This book looks at the underlying concepts and models that can be applied, and critically draws heavily on personal experience to shed light on how such change can be executed through high performing partnerships. This 'experience' is related in many case topical studies which include war-fighting in Iraq, team management on a husky sledge and operating global, virtual teams in the British Civil Service.

There is a wealth of academic rigour and thought in this book backed by many hands-on examples of how to manage change and partnering effectively. Contributing others include: Tim Barnsley, Tim Cummins, Andrew Downard, Graham Haines, Peter Hunter, David Hawkins, Anthony Kesten and Chris Markey.

"This book merits your attention as you seek to understand how to collaborate effectively with your partners." Air Vice Marshall Matt Wiles, Director General, UK Joint Supply Chain.
